I just got back from the AAW annual convention in Raleigh and received a huge shot in the arm of inspiration and a big hole in my pocket where apparently a lot of my money fell through. I am anxious to get home in the wood shop and put some of that new found know how to work.

It was great to see a number of our members there. A special thanks to Connie Lefebvre and Rita Bremer for driving my toys back to Florida for me so I didn't have to drag them around or on an airplane or ship them back home.

Many of the big names in woodturning were there. I had a chance to meet and speak with several of them and I think you will be excited to know that we are working on bringing one or two of them to demonstrate and teach at our club later this year or this coming winter.

We have a lot of photos but unfortunately there was not enough time to put it all together for this months edition of the newsletter. Stay tuned, there will be more on the AAW symposium in the August issue.

Also, keep in mind that SWAT starts August 23 and continues thru the 25th. Here is the link to register for the event, or just copy and paste: <https://wpforum.wufoo.com/forms/swat-2019-registration/>

We have some members planning to go and they tell me the show is even better than AAW.

It doesn't seem right to turn the wrong way so, when living life, remember to always turn in the right direction.

Movie Night has been canceled until further notice. . . We may try again in the future but, only if successful in reducing the price of the tickets.

•Demonstration

oMike Matherne gave the demonstration this month on Creating a Cosmic Cloud Bowl oMike's inspiration for the piece came from a YouTube video by a UK turner named Gary Lowe and a hands-on demo he attended conducted by Tim Yoder.

oMike starts by turning and finishing a bowl or platter of your choice. The piece should have an area demarcated to receive the design. Ideally the design can incorporate a raised border or bead, or a small indentation, or both along the edge of the design feature to help control and eliminate over-spray.

oThe area of the bowl to receive the design is then coated with India Ink to give this section a rich dark black background for the design to come. Mike has also used black paint for this step as well. Mike prefers India Ink because it allows the wood grain to show through somewhat, whereas a painted surface will not.

oOnce the background is done, Mike gives it one or two coats of Krylon Clear Acrylic spray ("Gloss Crystal Clear") to set the background.

oThe actual design is created using several different types of iridescent paints manufactured by Jo Sonja. Jo Sonja sells the paints in a kit of 6 colors. Mike used gold, green, turquoise, and violet for his project, but the kit also includes blue and red as well. The paint comes in small squeeze tubes and the consistency is similar to toothpaste.

oFor each color Mike put a dab of the paint in a small glass saucer. A little goes a long way! Mike probably used less than a ¼ of the dab of toothpaste you might use to brush your teeth. Using a small artist paint brush, he then mixes 2-3 drops of Liquidtex Flow-Aid into the paint. This is a popular thinner used by air brush artists to thin their paints when air brushing. He simply wipes his paint brush off with a paper towel as he moves from one color to the next. When finished he had 4 small glass saucers with a small portion of paint and thinner mix in the bottom of each. HOWEVER, EACH SAUCER'S CONTENTS IS AN IDENTICAL CREAMY WHITE! All the paints come out of the tube white and do not show their color until they start to dry. Mike is careful to keep each saucer next to its own paint tube so that he can keep them straight during application. I suppose you could also dab a bit of paint on a marker or something similar. Just do something so you keep your colors straight!

oThe application process is simple and straightforward (or at least Mike made it look easy!). Again using the small paint brush, Mike dipped it in the color of his choice and dabbed it onto the piece (over the black India ink background). Use a very small amount; the least you can put down and still call it a dab. Mike then uses an air brush hooked to a small compressor to blow the paint out across the surface. The paint is applied this way mixing colors and working around the entire design surface. It is applied so thinly that it creates a cloud like, translucent effect. This, combined with the rich iridescent color that appears as the paint dries, looks amazingly like some of the photos from space of large gas nebulae: hence the name "Cosmic Cloud". Once Mike is satisfied with the design, he lets the paint dry thoroughly then gives it a couple of coats of the Krylon Acrylic to protect the paint and finish the piece. Mike cautions to use Krylon which is an acrylic and not a product like Rustoleum which is an enamel product, since the Jo Sonja paints are acrylic.

oThe demonstration was very entertaining and informative and the finished piece will be stunning! Thanks Mike!

oNext meeting will be held Thursday August, 15, 2019 at Woodcraft Supply in Casselberry, oFlorida. Meeting to start at 7:00 PM oMeeting adjourned at 8:30 PM.

Minutes respectfully submitted by Jon Hollingshead
