

How do you remove the text "we pdf watermark remover" from this PDF? A: Does it have to be unique? If so, use pdftk input.pdf output watermark_removed.pdf And then extract the text with pdfcrop as follows: pdfcrop -l -in watermark_removed.pdf -w 0 -h 0 > out You can now trim out any spaces in the output with the sed program if you wish. You can then convert the PDF back to a regular document with pdftk as follows: pdftk -r -in watermark_removed.pdf -o output.pdf This works for PDFs containing text other than the watermark. I don't know if you can combine the two steps into a single step. Note that: The watermark text should be uniquely identifiable as opposed to uniquely embeddable. This ensures that the watermark will actually be removed. If the watermark text is a specially formatted value you might be able to crop it out with pdfcrop. If the watermark text is a string of letters or numbers then you can crop it out with pdftk. Just crop to the entire width and height as the text will not be continuous. pdftk sometimes changes the document structure which can affect the final PDF. If this is important to you, then you should instead use pdftk. Here is a random watermark showing text that can be identified as unique: After using pdftk: After using pdftk with no changes: I used a text editor to generate the output because it is more convenient. Q: How can I display data from a file to a calculator? I'm having a bit of trouble trying to get some basic maths to work. I'm attempting to display 1 random equation from a file in the terminal, and then ask the user to input one of two operators (eg. + or /), which will display the correct operation (+ = add and / = divide). I'm also having trouble referencing the correct mathematical operators for each input. Here's my code: import sys from random import randint with open('statement', 'r') as input: for i in input: print(i) read_choices =
