Watch. Even on a sunny spring day, the temperature of the Bay Area will dip below freezing, and the area could see some of the driest conditions of the year. Due to the relatively high pressure system over the Bay Area, during the daytime, the fog will begin to lift, while at night, the area will be blanketed with snow. (it is a rainy year), a computer controlled weather station at the Marine Corps Air Station Miramar is one of the most accurate forecasting tools. The station sends a digital representation of the weather, including temperature, wind speed and wind direction, to Bay Area regional forecast model, which is then distributed to other counties and the National Weather Service. As the forecast is one of the most used forms of weather guidance, all of these communications are monitored by the media, just as if it was a weather report. The National Weather Service's operations center also monitors the traffic patterns and fogs of Bay Area International Airport, which shows its ability to predict events and send pilots the proper instructions.
