Identification of a high-affinity [³H]2-amino-5-phosphonopentanoic acid binding site in rabbit synaptic plasma membranes. The binding of [³H]2-amino-5-phosphonopentanoic acid (AP5) to synaptic plasma membranes was characterized in a radioreceptor binding assay with displacement by AP5 and 1,2-bis(2-amino-4-phosphonobenzoyloxy)ethane (BCNE). The K_i of AP5 and BCNE was 7.6 and 2.9 μM , respectively. The binding of AP5 was reduced by atropine (53%) and guanethidine (51%), two specific antagonists of muscarinic cholinergic receptors. The binding of AP5 was not inhibited by adrenoceptor or serotonin receptor antagonists. AP5 bound to a single class of binding sites in synaptic plasma membranes with a K_D of 0.9 nM. A second site which bound with a K_D of 66 nM was also characterized. The B_{max} for the lower affinity site was 15 pmol/mg of protein. These results suggest that AP5 binds to a low-affinity site, which may represent a calcium channel complex, and to a high-affinity site, which may be associated with cholinergic receptors.

The most shocking thing about this is that, at the time, the San Diego Chargers were still an NFL team. This was just a classic in-game performance, where an offensive line gives up a sack (Cam Newton) and a linebacker and tight end (Eric Weddle and Mike Tolbert) get stuck in Newton's grasp in the last 10 minutes of the game. This is also the play where the Panthers really found a groove in their offense. Newton had just come off of a pick six and the offense had only been at the 30-yard line for a few snaps, but in this play, Newton is in the pocket for nearly 3 seconds and is also getting a good amount of time in the pocket. He is able to complete a nice pass to Jackson for 17 yards.
